"Heretofore the oil fuel problem has been principally investigated by various individual interests which have sought to secure information along certain lines. As a result there has not been secured that knowledge of the subject which would secure for the country at large such development of the use of crude oil as fuel as would be warranted considering the natural advantages possessed by the United States in having at its command near great sea-ports such a large proportionate supply of the world's production of the crude product.

A Condensed Guidebook

Tomorrow's Washington Sunday Times.

A vista of possible danger to the United States is opened up by the hordes of immigrants now making their way across the sea. Commissioner Sargent has given The Sunday Times his views on the subject, and statistics of the past tell what may be expected in the future. The vista repays exploration.

In the Republican National Convention of next Tuesday a few men of large influence and power will dominate and control. A little journey to the home of each of them, with some account of his life and achievements, and the sources of his strength. Well worth the reading.

The story of William H. Green, who began life as a water boy in the shops of the Charlotte and South Carolina Railroad, and ended it as assistant general manager of one of the geratest railway systems of the country. The romance of hard work envelops it, and success crowns it; difficulties proved but spurs to sturdier effort; one of the sort of stories that once begun must be finished before it can be put aside.

Cases have been known where thoughtless or ambitious persons have jumped from the frying-pan into the fire. Some of them bear upon the importation of birds or animals into this country, which were hailed as blessings and proved to be pests. Millions of dollars' worth of damage has been wrought by these invited agencies of destruction.

On another page are displayed in panoramic array the deeds of daring and the struggles against odds that have made conspicuous the war between the Jap and the Russ in the Far East. Bravery and gallantry will compel even reluctant admiration.

A view of the daily life of Attorney General Knox, recently named Senator from Pennsylvania, to succeed the late Senator Quay. He was said to be the hardest worked man in the Cabinet of the President, and in his new field of labor is expected to make his influence felt.

The progress of work on the filtration plant, that is to give Washington millions of gallons of sparkling water daily; the passing of the last of the great French restaurateurs of New Orleans; tales of the voodoo doctors, who make the credulous their victims; a veiled attack, in a recently published novel, upon the life of department clerks; fiction and fashion and beauty-these things and many others are but specimens from the pages of to-
